bamboo bliss

One of nature's most rapidly renewable fibers surprises us with its versatility and strength

Call us demanding. We want a natural material that's stronger than oak, but just as handsome—and that can be used to make everything from fine furniture to flooring, shipwrecks to window blinds, but without contributing to global deforestation. No, it's a tall order, but bamboo can do everything demanding hardwoods can do—and then some. The greater green is the fastest-growing woody plant on the planet, yet its stable, dense structure does three times the tensile strength of steel, making bamboo a smart choice for both its durability and its beauty.
